Press Clippings.

Everybody's Magazine: Little Robert and Jim, the grocery's delivery man, were great friends; and on the momentous day of Robert's promotion from dresses to knickerbockers, he waited eagerly in front of the house for Jim's coming. But the delivery man, when he came busied himself about his wagon, without seeming to see anything unusual in his small chum's appearance. Robert stood around hopefully, in various conscious positions until he could stand it no longer. "Jim," he burst out at last, "is your horses' afraid of pants?"

One of the regular punk shows was playing in Eureka the other night and a man in the audience went out after the first act. When the third act began he came back, drunk. He was refused admission on the grounds that he was full. "Drunk," he sputtered, "course I'm drunk: Don't suppose I'd want back in there if I wasn't drunk do?"

Western Publisher: One of the richest typographical errors that we have ever seen and that in a publication for printers, appears in the July number of the National Printer-Journalist. In describing the Forestry building, the largest log houses ever built, the article says: "The dogs used in the exterior of the building are being left in the rough, while those used in the interior will have the bark removed."

Atchison Globe: According to the Medical Record, forty-five dead have been brought to life by treatment under the new theory of squeezing the heart. The prospect of this always proving successful, and becoming of general use, isn't a pleasant one. After a man has lived and suffered unknown torments of death, it will not be agreeable to have ones heart squeezed till life is restored. Then too, it will arouse embarrassing situations. "He is dead," the doctor will tell the weeping widow; "Shall I squeeze him back to life?" She will think of all that has been disagreeable, and wonder if she must go through it again. If she hesitates for one minute, and then consents and the dead man hears of that moment's hesitation after life has been restored, what a world of misery it will mean to him! "She didn't want me squeezed back," he will think, "but she was afraid the neighbors would talk if she refused." The smart men are getting too smart: so smart that if they don't let a dead man stay dead, they are going to cause no end of trouble.
